Description

Kobis Wood is a delight to visit, offering not only a wide variety of trees and excellent access, but also the rare advantage of being surrounded by quiet, private woodland. Time spent here fosters a strong sense of well-being, as birdsong and the gentle rustle of leaves provide a soothing soundtrack to peaceful walks. Its tranquil atmosphere makes it an ideal place for relaxation, reflection, and observing nature at close hand.

The wood lies within a larger area of well-managed forest on the edge of Scunthorpe, close to the village of Broughton and just a few minutes' drive from the M180. Despite this ease of access, the woodland feels wonderfully secluded and far removed from the bustle of everyday life.

The land itself is level, with fertile soil reaching depths of up to a metre, resting on a sub-base of loose limestone. This combination ensures excellent drainage and creates ideal conditions for a diverse range of plant life. The ground flora includes several fern species, such as scaly male fern, hard shield fern, and bracken. Wildflowers are plentiful and include primroses, violets, early purple orchids, and red campion. Along the minor tracks, dog's mercury and grasses thrive, and these gently winding routes are easy to navigate, encouraging further exploration of the woodland.

The purchasers of the woodland will be asked to enter into a covenant to ensure the quiet and peaceful enjoyment of adjoining woodlands and meadows.

Trees

A wonderful mix of beech, and sycamore trees dominate the eastern edge of the woodland creating a vibrant and varied canopy that shifts gracefully with the seasons. In the south-western corner, a majestic Scotts pine fir stands tall as a striking natural landmark adding evergreen contrast to the predominantly broadleaved landscape. This blend not only enhances visual appeal but also enriches ecological diversity, providing food and shelter for a wide variety of birds, insects, and small mammals.

Wildlife

The surrounding local area is a diverse and picturesque landscape, blending woodland, parkland and open fields to create an ideal habitat for a wide variety of wildlife. Roe deer and brown hares are known to inhabit the area, often seen quietly moving through the undergrowth or grazing in clearings at dawn or dusk. The abundant vegetation provides ample shelter and food, supporting a balanced and thriving ecosystem.

The tree canopy, with its varying heights and densities, offers excellent refuge for owls, buzzards, and a rich assortment of songbirds. Tawny owls can frequently be heard calling at night, while buzzards soar overhead by day, effortlessly riding thermal currents. Smaller birds, such as woodpeckers, tits and finches nest among the branches, their calls adding to the peaceful woodland soundscape. The combination of habitats supports both resident and migratory birds making the area a particular delight for nature watchers and bird enthusiasts throughout the seasons.

Features

The woodland is level and well stocked with mature trees, creating a peaceful and sheltered environment. Scattered throughout are numerous small glades—perfect spots for camping and enjoying the tranquility of nature.

Access, tracks and footpaths

The woodland is served by an excellent stoned access track, suitable for most family vehicles and providing reliable year-round access.

There are no public footpaths crossing the woodland itself.

A public footpath runs just outside the eastern boundary, beyond a barbed-wire fence.

Rights and covenants

The purchasers of the woodland will be asked to enter into a covenant to ensure the quiet and peaceful enjoyment of adjoining woodlands and meadows.

Activities

The possibilities for this wild woodland are truly endless—from camping and forest bathing to simply soaking in the peace and beauty of nature. Kobis Wood presents an excellent opportunity for a new owner to engage in family forestry, creating lasting memories while caring for and learning about the land.

Managing this mixed habitat and developing bushcraft skills offers a rewarding escape from the pressures of modern life. Whether setting up a secluded campsite, building wildlife hides for observation and photography, or exploring woodland trails, there are countless ways to enjoy this natural space. Activities such as tree planting, coppicing, foraging, or simply sitting quietly among the trees provide both relaxation and a meaningful connection to the land. The woodland fosters a deeper bond with nature and serves as an ideal setting for education, outdoor recreation, and sustainable stewardship.

Local area and history

The nearby town of Scunthorpe appears in the Domesday Book of 1086 as Escumesthorpe, pointing to early Viking settlement in the area. The original site is believed to have been near the modern town centre, close to where Market Hill now stands. This long and layered history lends cultural depth to the surrounding landscape, including the adjacent woodlands.

The woodland itself lies close to an outcrop of high-lime-content ironstone, containing an average of around 25% iron. This ironstone forms part of a seam within the Lias Group strata, dating back to the Early Jurassic period, approximately 180-200 million years ago. Running north to south through Lincolnshire, the seam played a significant role in the region's iron and steel industries. Its presence has also shaped the local soil composition and drainage characteristics, helping to create the distinctive calcareous conditions that support a rich and well-adapted diversity of flora and fauna within the woodland.
